説明

Redmine has useful wiki macros such as "child_pages", "collapse", "include" and "thumbnail".

Despite the usefulness of those macros, not so many people know the feature because they are too hidden. Only people who read the detailed syntax reference know the feature. In addition, those macros are a bit long to type.

To resolve those problems, I propose to add a new button that assists users to recall and insert macros. Please see the screenshot below.

I like this idea. In the future, we can extend the button to include Redmine links to different objects (issues, source, etc).

Sounds great, some kind of "Redmine" button can be very convenient for sure although I think it would make more sense to have a separate menu for only macros.

The attached patch adds a button for inserting a wiki macro like "wiki-macro-button@2x.png":

<https://www.redmine.org/attachments/download/22585/wiki-macro-button@2x.png> .

I frequently use the "collapse" macro, so I would like to use a button to insert it easily.

I've tested the patch and it works great. Really convenient!

I also have 2cts to drop. :-)

- If it's possible, it would be nice if we could add the macro description as tooltip.

If we would follow this road would it make sense to have a Redmine icon for this button, yet?

Now the patch has Redmine icon. Let's deliver this feature in Redmine 4.1.0.

Nice feature but:

- we should find something else than the Redmine logo for this button

 as Bernhard said, it should come along with additional information about the macro and the arguments that it expects. The macro name on its own is not so useful.
